DROPSY

Dropsy is a kidney infection that can affect both koi and goldfish. It causes the fish's scales to stand up like a pine cone and the fish will be completely swollen. Once the fish looks like this, the infection is usually too far gone to cure. A diagnosis of dropsy is almost always FATAL. However, if the fish is to be saved, salt baths, antibiotic injections and ANTI-BACTERIAL medicated food.

Fish diagnosed with dropsy should be removed from the main system and quarantined so as to not pass the disease to the other fish. Dropsy is relatively difficult to pass from fish to fish unless an infected fish is left to die in the main system and the other fish eat the dead body.
